

The 5 must have benefits of equipment financing

Better Cashflow

Cash isn't just king; it's the whole royal family. Because it's so important to have money on hand to fuel growth and weather rough stretches, it's smart to lease so you have more of that almighty cash on hand.

Upfront costs decrease

Because you don't have to plunk down a lot of your hard-earned money to secure equipment with a lease, you have more money on hand to absorb the cost of new equipment, support the acquisition with resources, or even just promote it.

Simple to secure

Unlike a personal loan, equipment leases are often easy to qualify for. Regardless of credit or financial history, securing favorable terms and getting your business back on the road to growth is easy with the right partner.

Section 179-friendly

The IRS lets businesses deduct business equipment, creating another source of long-term savings on the kinds of investments that are necessary for your business growth. That's another reason to not put off those investments.

Inflation deflation

With the right lease, you'll be locked into an interest rate and fixed payments for the entire payback period. If interest rates goes up and the business environment gets more hostile - you won't feel that extra pinch.

Essentially, equipment leasing saves you money immediately and down the line, protects you from inflation, and simplifies the often stressful process of bringing in new, business-critical equipment. There are more than five good reasons to secure equipment leasing, but you have to admit, those are five pretty damn good ones. Don't wait for interest rates to rise or that equipment need to become dire.
